

Rules for participation in ICATT forums

Your participation is welcome and we hope you will benefit from a frank exchange with other participants from around the world. Global ICATT team welcomes a diversity of views on each of the issues addressed in the forums. To ensure that everyone benefits from this exchange and expression of views we would ask you to respect the following simple rules.

Conduct: It is strictly forbidden to post messages, material or links which are defamatory, obscene, abusive or threatening.

Liability and Responsibility: Each participant is solely and legally responsible and liable for any content he or she posts to a forum. Participants may only post material for which they have obtained a right to distribute electronically.

Attribution: The ICATT forums are a means for free expression of views between participants, each of which is speaking in their personal capacity. For this reason, participants in any forum should not quote the posting of other participants as representing anything but their personal views.

Copyright and Fair Use: Each participant in the ICATT forums retains the copyright of any material or links to material they might post to a forum. However, participants who post such material authorize other participants in the forum to make personal or customary use of that work, including creating links or re-posting such material to other internet sites, but not otherwise to reproduce or disseminate these materials unless permission is obtained.

The global ICATT team retains the right to refuse any message that is considered a violation of the above rules.
